

MORAL COURAGE

Teaserversieon

► FOR SOCIETY

Developed by Richard Voddé
Lecturer - researcher
Research Group Ethical Work

The gossiping friend

The music is pounding, lights are flashing, and then you hear it: your best friend is spreading lies about one of your friends. Pure gossip, reputation-destroying. Your blood boils — you want to stop him. But he's your best friend, for years now. Turning against him in front of the whole group? The tension is intense. What do you do?

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Neighbor abuses his wife

Emma witnesses domestic violence involving her neighbor, Mrs. Janssen. Mr. Janssen regularly abuses her, which deeply worries Emma. She hears shouting and sees bruises. Emma struggles with her conscience: she wants to help Mrs. Janssen, but she's afraid of how Mr. Janssen might react.

Emma searches for a safe way to support Mrs. Janssen.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

The found wallet

On a deserted bench lies a heavy leather wallet. Cash and an ID card stare back at you. No one around—just you. Temptations race through your mind: new shoes, unpaid bills.

But then you think of the possible owner: a student, a mother, a stranger desperately searching.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Colleague falsely claims overtime

Mark discovers that his colleague Emma is committing overtime fraud. This creates unfairness and dissatisfaction within the team. Mark feels uncomfortable and doesn't know how to act. He wants to uphold honesty and moral standards, but fears the consequences of reporting it. He's looking for a way to address the issue without damaging the atmosphere at work.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Colleague underperforms due to personal problems

Sophie notices that her colleague Mark is often late and not performing his work properly. This increases the workload for the team, which has to make up for the delays. Sophie knows that Mark is dealing with personal problems, but she's concerned about the negative impact on the team.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Manager makes discriminatory remarks

Emma notices that her manager, Mr. Jansen, regularly makes discriminatory remarks about colleagues. This creates an unsafe work environment and leads to dissatisfaction among employees. Emma feels uncomfortable and doesn't know how to respond. She wants to find a solution that addresses the issue while preserving workplace relationships.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

The low-coast internship abroad

Sophie, an ambitious international relations student, is offered an unpaid internship at a renowned NGO in South America. The internship presents a unique opportunity to gain experience in the field.

However, during her stay, she discovers that the NGO collaborates with a local company that is illegally logging rainforest. This company donates large sums of money to the NGO, enabling it to continue its operations.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Sustainability

The well-earned holidays

As a hardworking nurse, Laura enjoys her well-earned holidays. Sun, sea, and sand — all at bargain prices. But a nagging sense of guilt about the CO₂ emissions from her air travel overshadows her relaxation. She knows her trips aren't sustainable, yet she finds it hard to ignore her need for rest.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

The animal testing research

Pim, a veterinary medicine student, is conducting research into alternatives to animal testing. His research is funded by a pharmaceutical company that conducts animal testing itself. The company is now pressuring him to slow down his research, as its success could reduce the need for animal testing and harm their profits.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Diversity & Inclusion

The anonymous job application

A stack of résumés lies before you—candidates for a highly sought-after position. Two stand out: Jan de Vries and Ahmed Khalil. Identical qualifications, but different names. Jan sounds more familiar to you and your director; Ahmed, more foreign. Unconscious biases begin to surface. You know everyone has them. Now you face a dilemma: choose the most qualified candidate, or follow your gut feeling?

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Diversity & Inclusion

Jokes

Tom has been feeling uneasy for weeks. His friends, whom he's been close with for years, are making homophobic jokes more and more often. Every time it happens, he shrinks inside. He wants to speak up, but fear holds him back. What if they no longer accept him? He doesn't want to ruin the atmosphere or be seen as the complainer. But the jokes are becoming more hurtful, and it's getting harder and harder to ignore them.

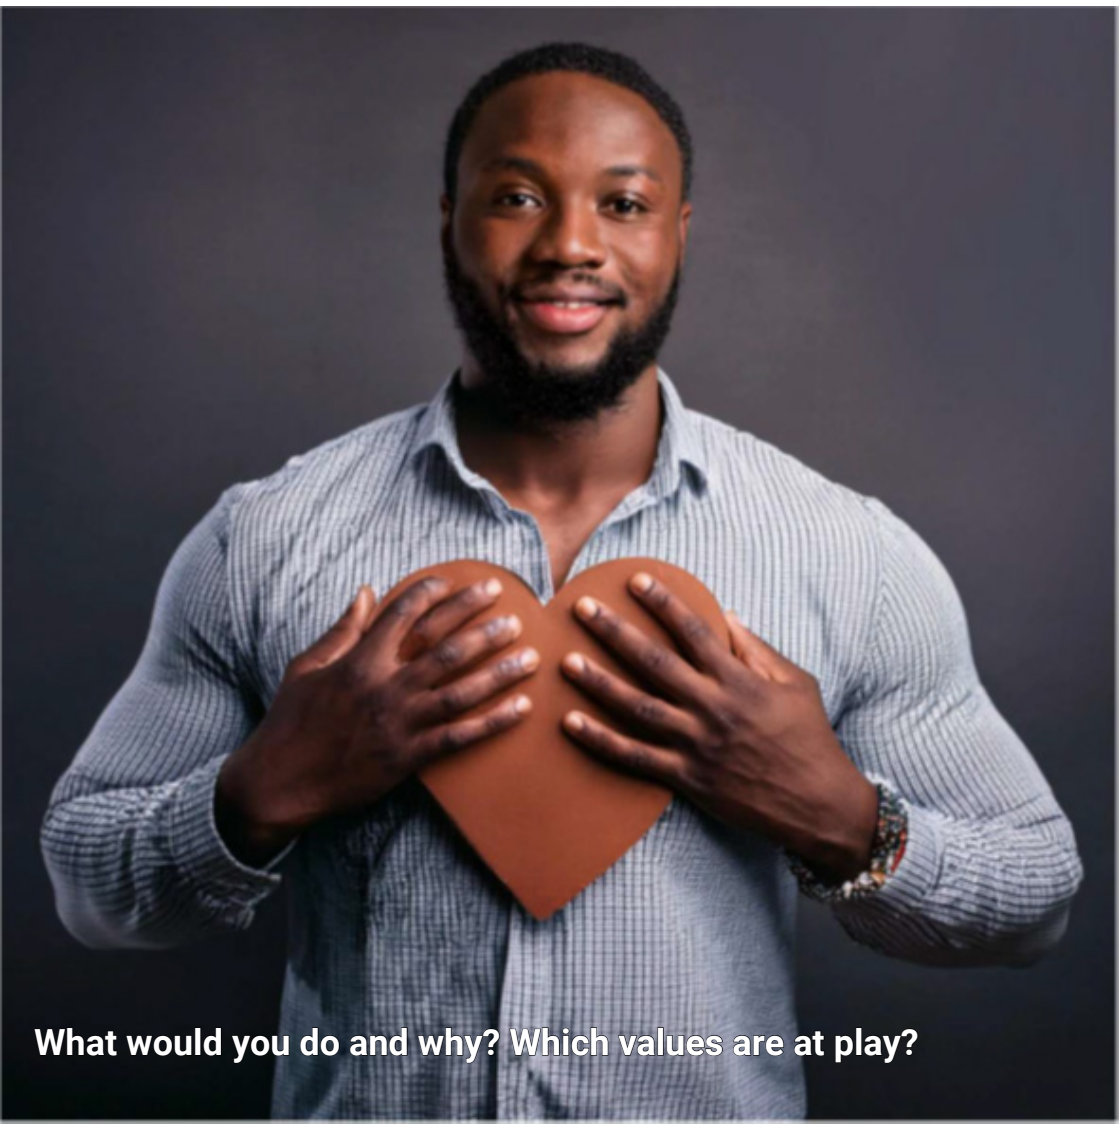

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Diversity & Inclusion

The intercultural relationship

Your heart is pounding — a mix of excitement and fear. You're hopelessly in love with someone from a different cultural background, a person who has turned your world upside down. But there's a shadow over your happiness: your family. They are conservative, deeply attached to tradition, and they disapprove of the relationship. They see it as a threat to their values, a departure from everything they've always known.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Photo

You posted a photo of a friend without their permission, and the friend is angry because the photo captures an embarrassing moment. They feel betrayed and ashamed, especially since the photo has already been seen and shared by several people.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Reputation

In a moment of stress, you post a negative review about a competitor's business with the intention of damaging their reputation. The review contains false information that discourages potential customers, leading to a drop in the company's sales.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?

Student life

Great group work

Yip sighs. Working with Tijn is a nightmare. He's the star of the program — smooth talker, full of charisma — but his work ethic is terrible. Agreements? Tijn doesn't do those. He's late, skips meetings, and never does his part of the work — it's become the norm. And as the president of a student association, he's always busy partying, of course. Still, during the final presentation, Tijn steals the show once again. With his charm and presentation skills, he secures an 8 for the group.

What would you do and why? Which values are at play?